

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Contact:

Kim Condon

Myriad Tech, LLC

kcondon@myriadtech.net

GEEKVOLUTION

The Next Generation of Social Networking for Geeks

San Francisco, CA – September 8, 2008 – Geek Alert! The next evolutionary leap in online social networking is hitting the web in private beta September 9, 2008 via Geekvolution.com, which is making its debut at TechCrunch50 in San Francisco, California. Geekvolution.com makes it simple for members to display rich media like no other social network. Anyone can now showcase, share and incorporate rich media, including digital art, photography, illustrations and more, into their online networking experience, allowing a level of creative self-expression that internet users have been craving.

Geekvolution.com was founded for people who have grown up with online networking as an extension of their social life, but now clamor for the next generation of social networking tools. Geekvolution's members are able to customize their personal profiles using simple drag and drop technology vs. complicated html code. The site has a clean interface, rich graphics, less page scrolling, fewer page loads, and a desktop application look and feel backed by the dynamic power of the web. Members can connect, discuss and express their interests using a visually stunning interface made all the more powerful by a content contribution network. Members can contribute and share their own graphic designs, photos and other digital creations with all enabling users to easily integrate user-generated content into their personal network.

What does all of that mean? It means that Geekvolution.com sets its members free from the hassles and headaches of traditional networking sites to focus on what matters—connecting and building relationships with people who share their interests. President and Founder Ryan Flannagan summed up this goal by stating, “We designed the site with ease of use and visual expression as a priority, so users can spend less time setting up their profiles and more time actually connecting with each other, because, as we see it, this is what online networking is supposed to be about.” Mr. Flannagan relates this concept back to Geekvolution.com's motto: “Be yourself.” Geekvolution takes social networking to the next level with richer tools to extend member expression and amplify their life on the web.

About TechCrunch50:

Founded in 2007 by leading technology blog TechCrunch and entrepreneur Jason Calacanis, the TechCrunch50 conference provides a platform for early-stage, and frequently unfunded, companies to launch for the first time to the technology industry's most influential venture capitalists, corporations, angel investors, fellow entrepreneurs and the international media. Companies are selected to participate exclusively on merit. TechCrunch50 is supported by corporate sponsors Google, Microsoft, MySpace, Salesforce, MSN Money, Symantec, Thomson Reuters and Yahoo!, as well as venture capital firms including Sequoia Capital, Mayfield Fund, Clearstone Venture Partners, Charles River Ventures, Founders Fund, Perkins Coie and Fenwick & West.

About Myriad Tech, LLC:

Myriad Tech LLC, the creator of Geekvolution.com, is based in Lawrence, Kansas. The company specializes in web-based application design and development using the latest in innovative technology, such as Adobe A.I.R., Flex 3, Ajax, and Ruby on Rails.

If you would like more information about this topic, or to schedule an interview with Ryan Flannagan, please email Kim Condon at kcondon@myriadtech.net.